

“He allowed Maddox to believe he was an army colonel, although ‘Colonel’ was merely his given name.”

“The giraffes are cannibals that use their necks to hang the skins of their victims.”

“Although it is commonly believed that oyster ice cream was invented in 1842, it was already in existence decades earlier.”

“Upon reaching the depth of 12,262m in 1989, some interesting geologic anomalies were found, although they reported no supernatural encounters.”

“Somehow, Gun had a son Yu. Various myths suggest that this occurred under circumstances that would not meet the normal criteria for historical fact.”

“There were already two Johnsons ("Pear-Loving Johnson" and "Long Toes Johnson"); nicknames were commonplace, and with Johnson's show of eating the liver, he received his name.”

“They couldn’t settle in Afghanistan, so from there they headed east until they reached the area of the Tibetan-Chinese border. They finally settled in China in 231 BCE. This is when they realized that they probably should have stayed in Afghanistan.”

“As the experimentation progressed, a point arrived where outsiders were drugged with no explanation whatsoever and surprise acid trips became something of an occupational hazard among CIA operatives.”

“The text of some versions is accompanied by paratextual notes by the alleged author/narrator, which run down the page, and which at key plot points attempts [sic] to explicate the author's opinions on women's roles in society, the practice of magic, and cats.”

“In Cornwall is two speches, the one is naughty Englysshe, and the other is Cornysse speche.”

Two lists under “Last of the Romans”:

“List of people described as ‘Last of the Romans’

“List of rulers who, in a more literal sense, also could be described as ‘Last of the Romans’”

“Generidus did this with unusual effectiveness; his techniques were remarkable for this period, in that they included training his troops, disciplining them, and giving them appropriate supplies.”

“Lucan's disappearance has captivated the public's imagination for decades, with thousands of sightings reported around the world. One of the earliest such sightings occurred shortly after the murder, but it turned out to be British politician John Stonehouse who had attempted to fake his own death.”

“William Barrett relied exclusively on these fake transcripts when writing his History and Antiquities of Bristol (1789) which became an enormous failure.”

“The Lord Hee-Haw name, however, was used for a time by The Daily Telegraph to refer to Lord Haw-Haw, generating some confusion between nicknames and broadcasters.”

(With no prior mention of Abraham Lincoln) “Abraham Lincoln was not known to wear a monocle, although it has also been said that he created his own style of monocle and wore it when he was away from the public.”

“The cheetah frequently escaped into the orchestra pit, where it terrorized the musicians, adding another element of excitement to the show.”

“Everything that is known about Lucian's life comes from his own writings, which are often difficult to interpret because of his extensive use of sarcasm.”

“Later kings are known as rois fainéants ("do-nothing kings"), despite the fact that only the last two kings did nothing.”

“In the inside it's filled with a baby and the tradition includes whomever receives the baby in their slice has to buy the next cake.”

“In South Africa, the miniskirt has existed since pre-colonial times.”

“William returned to London where he wrote an article for Look magazine titled ‘Why I Hate my Uncle.’”

“A memorable vehicle accompanied the procession; a snail named ‘women's suffrage.’ The organizers were strongly criticized for the snail and some critics saw this entirely as a sign of the political immaturity of the women.”

(Name:) “Vsevolod III Yuryevich, or Vsevolod the Big Nest”

“The staff's intended role in the coronation has been forgotten since medieval times, and so it is carried into the Abbey by a peer as a holy relic and laid on the altar, where it remains throughout the ceremony.”